SUGGESTED SPEECH TO BE USED IN MAKING THE AWARD

With these awards the National Civil Service League recognizes quality in public service. The career of Mr. John F. Blake typifies the true meaning of this concept. He has served the United States Government for thirty-five years with distinction and substantive achievement. Through his knowledge, experience, personal dedication, and clearly demonstrated managerial ability, Mr. Blake has made significant and invaluable contributions to our mission and has become the shining example for all who aspire to leadership roles in the Central Intelligence Agency and indeed throughout the Intelligence Community.

In nominating Mr. Blake for this award I described him as "the glue which held the Agency together." These words were specifically intended to describe the unique contribution made by Mr. Blake during the seven months he served as Acting Deputy Director of Central Intelligence. This period, from July 1977 to February 1978, was critical in the life of the Agency. Decisions of far reaching and critical importance to the very fibre of the intelligence profession were required. During these seven months, Mr. Blake provided a steadying hand on the Agency and the entire intelligence profession. His infectious enthusiasm, vitality and personal integrity were instrumental in keeping CIA on track and producing intelligence up to its fullest capabilities.

The selection of Mr. Blake for this award highlights the true value and exceptional contributions he has made to the public service and I am very pleased to have the opportunity to make this presentation.

The awards will be given in alphabetical order (per the list of winners attached). The head of your agency (or his designee) will be introduced: then this official will present the agency's accomplishments for approximately two minutes. At the conclusion of the official's remarks, the award will be presented to the recipient. If the head of your agency finds it impossible to be present, we would ask that he name a representative at the appropriate level to present the agency's winner. We will need this information by November 27.

INVITATIONS FOR GUESTS OF AGENCY OFFICIALS AND AWARD WINNERS

Each agency head may invite four guests; award winners may invite five. If more guests are expected, please contact Blanche Green at 654-8664. A list of all guests should be forwarded to the League by November 27, so that a head count and roster of guests can be maintained.

League staff members will be on hand the morning of the 4th to assist in any way they can to make this occasion an enjoyable one for all involved. Meanwhile if there is any additional information not covered in this memorandum, please do not hesitate to call me. CIA Employee From Alexandria Receives Civil Service Award

John F. Blake, of Alexandria, a senior official of the Central Intelligence Agency, has been selected as a recipient of this year's National Civil Service League Career Service Award. The National Civil Service League Award is awarded annually to 10 public servants for efficiency, quality and economy in government management.

Blake has had a 35-year career in intelligence. He graduated in 1943 from the University of San Francisco, and attended the National War College in 1963, and has an M.A. degree from the George Washington University.

AS AN ARMY officer in World War II, he served in the Office of Strategic Services (OSS), the wartime predecessor of the CIA. He joined the CIA when it was formed in 1947 and is the senior ranking career officer of the agency.

Currently the CIA's deputy director for administration, Blake is one of a very few career CIA officers who has served in senior positions in each of the agency's major components and in both domestic and overseas locations, an agency spokesman said.

Blake has long been recognized as an expert practitioner in the field of administration, the spokesman said. In his nominating statement, the director of Central Intelligence, Adm. Stanfield Turner, calls Blake a "shining example for all who aspire to leadership roles as professional administrators in CIA and throughout the Intelligence Community."

TURNER ALSO refers to Blake's contribution as acting deputy director of Central Intelligence from July 1977 until February 1978, stating that "his native versatility, dedication and acuity when combined with his broad experience and distinguished service in all major functional areas of the agency produced an exemplary example of leadership which sustained the agency through a trying interim period."

Blake was born in San
